Because the economy has not fully recovered from the 2008 recession, the graduates of 2010 are facing a tough job market. Many planning to attend additional education will compete with talented students from across the United States and around the world. In this environment, the margin between success and failure is becoming smaller and smaller.

Helping others get health care is the right thing

Our federal health care system leaves much to be desired. In American newspapers, the number of citizens without health care coverage varies from 40% to nearly 50%. Each year, the National Survey of Student Engagement (NSSE) assesses many aspects of student behavior. The NSSE results provide some insight into what college students can do to distinguish themselves and gain a competitive advantage.

Improvements to Harrivelle park appreciated

Many of the people I've met in their 70s are telling me that they are more active than they were in their 20s and 30s. I have a friend who is 80 years old and still working full-time. He says that the key to staying active is to keep learning and growing.

It's not hate speech it's "righteous indignation"

"We applaud Granite for stepping up and taking a policy to keep teachers and students on online social sites with a loophole for educational relationships." On St. George, March 13, 2010

I was going to tell you on Facebook, but the Weber School District allows these types of networks. So long as they are properly monitored and the sites do function as learning tools, we hope they continue to be used.

The Davis School District does not have a specific ban on social media, but does have a clear "Ethical conduct for professional educators" provision that prohibits "inappropriate contact in any communication" between educators and students.

The Ogden district is closely watching a proposed policy in the Uintah School District that would also ban personal communication between students and teachers on online social sites with a loophole for educational relationships.

We applaud Graule for stepping up and taking a policy to keep teachers and students on online social sites with a loophole for educational relationships.

I was going to tell you on Facebook, but the Weber School District allows these types of networks. So long as they are properly monitored and the sites do function as learning tools, we hope they continue to be used.

The Davis School District does not have a specific ban on social media, but does have a clear "Ethical conduct for professional educators" provision that prohibits "inappropriate contact in any communication" between educators and students.

The Ogden district is closely watching a proposed policy in the Uintah School District that would also ban personal communication between students and teachers on online social sites with a loophole for educational relationships.

We applaud Graule for stepping up and taking a policy to keep teachers and students on online social sites with a loophole for educational relationships.

I was going to tell you on Facebook, but the Weber School District allows these types of networks. So long as they are properly monitored and the sites do function as learning tools, we hope they continue to be used.

The Davis School District does not have a specific ban on social media, but does have a clear "Ethical conduct for professional educators" provision that prohibits "inappropriate contact in any communication" between educators and students.

The Ogden district is closely watching a proposed policy in the Uintah School District that would also ban personal communication between students and teachers on online social sites with a loophole for educational relationships.

We applaud Graule for stepping up and taking a policy to keep teachers and students on online social sites with a loophole for educational relationships.