We finally pursued its members for being inconsistent for LDS Church leaders to say that citizenship is not an obstacle to baptism, but millions of LDS Church members within the United States now formally recognize their illegal immigration status. Backers of the document include Utah Attorney General Mark Shurtleff, John C. Wester, bishop of the Salt Lake City LDS Stake, Church President Thomas Monson and former Utah Governor Olene Walker. The LDS Church will likely draw opposition from some of its more conservative members, but if successful, the legislation would be a milestone in the history of the LDS Church and its approach to immigration.

The LDS Church's position will likely be a source of conflict for the Utah Compact, a document unveiled on the afternoon of Oct. 1, 2007.

This letter is in response to the Oct. 1 letter: “Too much money spent on school sports.” The writer stated that the majority of the money invested in schools goes towards sports. I would like to point out that many classrooms in many Ogden School District's schools now contain a “smart” or interwrite board, an increasingly popular interactive teaching tool used in many classrooms in many schools. Education may be the best way to help turn our homes off.

The Department of Commerce is currently developing a new set of national energy efficiency guidelines for new transportation vehicles. These guidelines will be based on the energy efficiency of the average vehicle sold in the United States during the 2007 model year.
